machines (SD) ("Rural fertility increases total national expenditure."

Andaya had statistics on his side yesterday as he advanced his theory in terms of practical considerations—food supply, classroom shortage, and even fertility on a harrowing level.

Post-partum headache

"Infant couples make in the bedroom today will appear in classrooms seven years from now," the lawmaker explained. "When they do, finding income and teachers for them is one big post-partum headache for the government."

He was talking about four Filipino kids every minute, Andaya said, or 40 every 10 minutes.

"It costs P400,000 minimum to build a classroom for 40 kids and at least P100,000 for their new teacher's [annual salary]," he pointed out.

Budget strain

Next year alone, at the current 2.3 percent population growth rate, he said the government would have to contend with a population of 86 million—from 84 million this year—in the face of "flat revenues and a galloping deficit."

This was bound to strain the security budget as well, said Andaya.

"Ideally [there should be] one new policeman for every 500 new Filipinos. An additional two million would then require 4,000 new cops," he said.

Which translated to P6.4 billion a year, he said, because it cost "a minimum of P160,000 to train, equip, outfit and pay the first-year salary of one rookie cop."

This was a "catastrophic" pressure on the national budget, he said.

Food targets

And we've not even factored in food production.

With the population projected to hit 160 million 24 years from now, Andaya noted, investments should be made "this early" to double farm output, and also the number of existing classrooms, roads and hospitals.

"We must invest in irrigation facilities [to start with]," Andaya said.

The budget deficit has been blamed largely on poor income collection, which has failed to cope with government expenditure. This has forced the government to rely on domestic and foreign borrowings.

Economical solution

Andaya proposed a theoretically simpler and hopefully more economical solution that starts in the bedroom, not population control.

"We can invest more in population management programs that would allow couples to meet the family size they deem ideal," he said.

"We cannot keep producing two million babies a year—many of them birthed assembly-line fashion in crowded government hospitals—without [diminishing] the quality of life of all Filipinos."

'Running priest' raps mishandling of media at congress

By Renato D. Puno
PMA Southern Luzon Bureau

MANILA, July 12—“Running priest” is what Father and PMA Southern Luzon Bureau Chief Fr. Benigno S. Dela Cruz said in a letter to the Manila Bulletin last week as he expressed his disapproval of the media’s attitude of the congressmen’s conduct in the National Congress of the Philippines (NCP) in the last few days.

The congressmen, he said, were not “running” but were “mishandling” the media. He said that the congressmen were not “running” but were “mishandling” the media. He said that the congressmen were not “running” but were “mishandling” the media.

Bulgaria believes Iraq hostages are still alive

SOFIA—Bulgaria said it believed two Bulgarian truck drivers kidnapped in Iraq were still alive a day after an execution deadline expired and sent a mission to Baghdad on Saturday to try to free them.

The abductors said they would kill the two Bulgarians late on Friday unless US and forces freed prisoners in Iraq, propelling the Balkan country into a flurry of diplomatic activity to rescue the men.

"We have unconfirmed information that the Bulgarian hostages are alive," Bulgarian Foreign Minister Solomon Pasy told Bulgarian media, adding it had not been possible to verify the information.

He said Bulgarian diplomats were sent to Iraq on Saturday to help coordinate efforts to free the hostages—Georgi Lavev, 30, and Ivailo Kapov, 52.

"The situation is very serious. We are making efforts to send the right messages to the captors and persuade them: Bulgaria is not a hostile country," Pasy said.

Bulgarian President Georgi Parvanov spoke with US President George W. Bush, who thanked him for committing troops to Iraq and said Washington would do everything to help.

On Thursday, a group led by Jordanian militant Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, which has already claimed the beheadings of an American and a South Korean in Iraq, said it would kill the Bulgarians within 24 hours unless the United States released imprisoned Iraqis.

Bulgaria was adamant its pro-US policy on Iraq would not change as a result of the kidnappings. The new NATO member has a 470-strong unit based in the southern Iraqi city of Kirkuk.

"Bulgaria is a friend to Arab nations and to the Iraqi people and we are in Iraq to help Iraqi people. We shall stay there while the Iraqi people need our help," Pasy said.

The kidnappings have increased pressure on Prime Minister Simeon Saxe-Coburg's government, which is trying to bring the ex-communist country of eight million into the Western fold.

"Everyone is praying," read the front-page headline of the influential Trud daily, saying the two drivers made the dangerous trip because of poverty at home.

The spouses of the two hostages said the men were concerned about the trip and were last heard from on June 27.

"I hope their captors realize that our husbands are just ordinary people trying to support their families," said Neli Kapova, wife of hostage Kapov. "(My husband) left because we needed the money."

Faulty Iraq intel won't stop US pre-emptive actions

By Matt Kelley

WASHINGTON—Now that a Senate committee has concluded the CIA falsely claimed Iraq had weapons of mass destruction, expect more caution on Capitol Hill the next time a president seeks approval for pre-emptive military action.

But don't expect America to strike only after an attack.

Even the harshest critics of the Bush administration's policy of pre-emption say the United States must act in the face of a clear threat.

What is a clear threat? Can the public trust what US intelligence says about that threat?

"Iraq was the first case of pre-emptive war by the United States, and we have learned an important lesson—that pre-emptive war depends on good, actionable intelligence," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, a Democrat.

"In this case, the intelligence was both bad and wrong," said Feinstein, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, which just released its report on prewar intelligence about Iraq.

Months before the Iraq invasion in March 2003, the White House published a "national security strategy" that abandoned the Cold War reliance on deterring potential enemies with overwhelming military strength—and nuclear weapons.

The Sept. 11 attacks showed that America cannot rely on deterrence and must at times strike to prevent attacks, President George W. Bush reasoned.

The public version of the document left unstated the implied threat of using nuclear weapons to strike first against weapons of mass destruction.

"The United States can no longer solely rely on a reactive posture as we have in the past," Bush wrote. "We cannot let our enemies strike first."

Critics, including many Democrats, say the emphasis on pre-emption needlessly antagonized US allies and projected an image of America as a military giant willing to shoot first and ask questions later.

"It really contributed to this sense of an out of control, cowboy foreign policy," said analyst Michael O'Hanlon of the liberal Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank.

The administration and its supporters say abandoning a policy of pre-emptive war would only invite attacks on the United States. They contend the war in Iraq was justified even if Iraq had no chemical or biological weapons because President Saddam Hussein had a longing for such weapons and had used them in the past.

Israel seeks US support at UN Council over barrier

JERUSALEM—Israel has asked Washington to back any UN Security Council resolution that would set an (FIDEL) World Court ruling that Israeli West Bank barrier is legal, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Monday.

"The issue will go to the Security Council because the (Palestinians) are not on an equal footing in the UN Council," Peres said Monday.

He said he had just spent a week in the United States trying to persuade "all our party" to support the Palestinians to work in an attempt to the Security Council. "There have been meetings... that have in a good way there will be a result," he added.

The World Court, the UN's highest tribunal, issued a non-binding opinion that the barrier is legal but that it must be removed. The barrier, which runs across the West Bank, should be dismantled, said the 15-nation Security Council can take action on the ruling, but as a permanent member, Israel vetoed the United Nations veto.

Peres said Israel's Prime Minister Ehud Olmert said, "We will continue to support the Palestinians in opening the wall."

"This wall cannot be imposed on us and this wall will... be torn down," he said at his West Bank headquarters.

Israel has said the ruling is illegal because it fails to address Israel's security needs. The barrier is a security measure to protect Israel from terrorism, it says. It says the barrier is a security measure to protect Israel from terrorism, it says.

15th Week in Ordinary Time

1st Reading: In 1: 10-17

Evangelist: Mt 10: 1-11

Jesus said to his disciples, "Do not think that I have come to abolish peace on earth. I have not come to bring peace, but a sword.

For I have come to bring peace to the house and to bring peace to the family: a father against his son, a mother against her daughter, and a brother against his brother."

Then Jesus said to his disciples, "Whoever wishes to be my disciple must deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. Whoever wishes to save his life must lose it, and whoever wishes to lose his life for me and for the Gospel will save it. Whoever loves his father or mother more than me is not worthy of me. And whoever does not take up his cross and follow me is not worthy of me.

Whoever takes up his cross and follows me will save his life. Whoever loves his father or mother more than me is not worthy of me.

Whoever takes up his cross and follows me

1000000L—British Prime Minister Tony Blair takes a politically potent interest this week when an inquiry reports on whether his government bought the Iraq war on the basis of false intelligence about Baghdad's weapons of mass destruction.

A similar US probe restricted US intelligence agencies for months over Iraq's weapons of mass destruction (WMDs) on Friday, but absolute President George W. Bush's mounting pressure to investigate the threat.

Such a conclusion from Barker would be about the last concern that could upset many pundits there, although it would still prove extremely sticky for the wider business.

The premier will face some criticism for an over-confidential style of government, but will not be accused of sowing opposition to keep up the threat posed by Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction (WMD) stocks, the sources said.

When Butler was appointed to head the inquiry, critics complained that his 27 years in the civil service made him too much of a government insider to be truly independent.

Others, however, argue that Blair could be in for a surprise: that a man who served five separate prison sentences and is thus more loyal to the institutions of justice than the individuals who offend them.

Several newspaper reports have questioned the tactic, M, will also mainly target the intelligence community while others have tipped foreign Secretary Jack Straw to disavow the bulk of the military hit.

"The book says there, and I don't think that the political layer in my country can escape the consequences of a general fall out," says William Miller-Jones, the editor of Britain's Joint Intelligence Committee, said on television.

The story is that Bush, War-risk Brown and his Marxist wife is saving millions of heads almost exclusively on the basis that the Iraq leader's words of chemical and biological weapons would be "true."

The protest showed his two-hour rap of crime has not worn when he submitted as a parliamentary candidate that the weapons issue must be faced.

"They could have been removed. They could have been hidden. They could have destroyed," he said.

The controversy sparked speculation that might eventually spotlight in the immediate future intelligence in an attempt to draw a line under the debate, whose general direction expected to remain unclear then.

Unfortunately for the prime suspect, Moore is proving that the team might damage his case more right now with the search, while he's out there.

Last month, voters handed the Labour Party a humiliating rebuff in a general and local elections, pushing it to its humiliating third place in the general poll.

Blair came close to quitting
last month

LONDON — British Prime Minister Tony Blair, whose popularity has taken a severe battering over Iraq, came close to resigning last month, but was dissuaded. One thing is for sure: as new Cabinet members, the BBC said on Tuesday.

Charles Clarke, John Reid, Tom Swire and Patricia Hewitt, respectively in charge of education, health, culture and trade and justice, emphatically approached this because he was "not only welcoming" to failure as a process, the Observer said.

The British leader, who led the Labour Party to victory in 1997 and 2005, has withdrawn his name as a potential candidate to his decision to take Britain into last year's

But a Downing Street spokesman reacted to the report by the British Broadcasting Corp. by saying that the prime minister had always said he would lead a Labour Party into the next general election, which is expected some time next year.

The BBC report says the position of Blair's policy of favouring state schools over private education is "by no means" as simple as it seems, and that Blair's policy of favouring state schools is well seen as highly controversial.

On Wednesday, a commitment of inquiry is due to parliament, the findings of the inquiries by the intelligence services to assessing the threat posed by Iraq.

Headed by Lord Butler, a top civil servant, the report on intelligence findings over Iraqi weapons aims to shed light on the process that led London to believe, before the war, that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction.

From reports on the the findings will implicate the break of Britain's spy net this, especially John Hacking, a former chair of the Joint Intelligence Committee (JIC), who has been promoted to head Britain's foreign intelligence service MI6.

That made the need to destroy weapons of mass destruction the central point of his argument justifying going to war, in the face of strong public opposition.

Where lies GMA's real problem

WHETHER or not President Macapagal-Arroyo has majority support in Congress is immaterial. Just about everyone there is going to toe the line, what with the pork barrel to be distributed under her discretion.

The real problem will be coming from vested interests. Can GMA back this?

I certainly would like to see her deregulate the politically influential shipping, banking and sugar industries. I also would like to see her remove herself protection from politically influential products such as cement.

Moreover, in dealing with the budget deficit, I hope she can start by dropping the proposed regressive tax on texting, and instead collect unpaid taxes from the biggest corporations in the land; index sin taxes on inflation and collect taxes less from the working class and more from businesses and professionals, including high-paid movie stars.

No basis for Montalvan's column

I READ with dismay the column of Antonio J. Montalvan II (PII, 6/7/04) entitled "And now for the facts." Based on the book "Robbed: An Investigation of Corruption in Philippine Education" (Yvonne Chua, Philippine Center for Investigative Journalism, 1999), he condenses "the vast world of Philippine public education as one that provides 'a classic case of corruption in the Philippines.'"

One wonders how much research a columnist has to do to form an opinion, and then spit it on the public. The book covers a period that was over six years ago, dating back to the Estrada administration. Since then, there have been many reform initiatives in the Department of Education, precisely to clean up not only its processes but also its reputation.

The procurement of school furniture, textbooks and instructional materials has been managed very carefully since the Arroyo administration took over. Chua herself will attest that while overpricing still occurs, it involves only the Local School Board funds controlled by local governments but not where funds are the DepEd's. For example, the DepEd opened bids for textbook procurement and awarded P1.3 billion in contracts to six publishing consortia (national and international) in February 2003. By November 2003, the entire procurement of 37 million textbooks and teachers' manuals were delivered—the first time in DepEd history that this was carried out in 12 months (versus the average 20-24 months in previous, much smaller procurements). Further, the average price per book for the entire procurement was P41.25 versus the P90 average in Chua's book (15 years earlier).

This was attained by allowing a whole army of NGOs—organized by Government Watch (G-Watch) and the Philippine Governance Forum of the Ateneo School of Government—to monitor and watch the entire process from bid opening to inspection upon delivery. Among these NGOs are Code-NGO, Remyon-sung Filipino, Procurement Watch and others. The practice will now serve as the benchmark for future deliveries.

The distribution of textbooks is a continuing concern that involves the direct delivery of textbooks to classrooms in over 42,000 elementary and secondary schools nationwide. We will continue to hear reports of book shortage and we will work very hard to make sure that the books we procure will not be left lying in store rooms but are actually handed over to students.

The DepEd used to be known as "one of the five most corrupt agencies in government." Today, the SWS Enterprise Surveys rank the DepEd as "one of the five agencies doing the most to address corruption."

Media can't assume that what was true a decade ago remains so today. Montalvan would be wise to do actual research for columns rather than write book reports on publications written over five years ago.

Unsolicited advice for GMA

If President Macapagal-Arroyo really wants to become a successful and effective leader, then I have an unsolicited advice for her.

Among others, she should do the following:

1. Dismiss "sipsips" in and outside Malacañang.
2. Stop issuing "praise" releases and denial statements concerning travel advisories of foreign governments.
3. Don't dismiss the constructive criticisms of Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr.
4. Become a role model and lead by example.
5. Don't be arrogant and stubborn. Instead, be humble so you will not stumble.
6. Make all contracts transparent, honest and always favorable to the government.
7. Let all government employees undergo lifestyle checks, starting with the members of the First Family and the Cabinet.
8. Execute the law without fear or favor.
9. Always remember that honesty is the best policy.
10. Don't persecute the opposition.
11. Don't present aspects to the media because they are presumed innocent until they are found guilty by competent courts. Instead, order the police, military and the NBI to gather strong and credible evidence so the courts can convict them.
12. Live an austere and simple life.
13. Appoint only God-fearing, competent, incorruptible and hard-working people from all sectors of society to any government position.

Finally, in making decisions, ask if you can defend them at Plaza Miranda—like what President Maguway used to do.

Little hope for small fishers in GMA's pro-poor agenda

DESPITE President Macapagal-Arroyo's inaugural speech emphasizing her pro-poor agenda, we believe she will not improve the lives of one million small fishers who belong to "the poorest of the poor," that is, if she does not change government policies that neglect the fisherfolk while favoring the aquaculture sub-sector.

Since 2001, despite the Fisheries Code mandate, her administration has not provided the fisherfolk any substantial help and the needed support to improve their production, post-harvest and marketing technology and facilities.

In contrast, she has continued the policy of giving tax incentives and other subsidies to the aquaculture sector, which is dominated by big-time importers (e.g., land mollusks), investors and exporters. These incentives include duty-free importation of aquaculture inputs and tax holidays (for shrimp growers).

But because of weak aquaculture regulations, these incentives have promoted aquaculture expansion at the expense of the coastal resources that small fishers depend on for their livelihood. Unregulated aquaculture has greatly reduced wild fish stocks by destroying their breeding and spawning grounds in the coastal areas.

Along with tax incentives, the unpaid environmental costs—also called market externalities—have made aquaculture products cheaper (though only temporarily because in the end the environmental costs will be such as to make production unsustainable). Tilapia, which now costs less than gulabang, is a case in point. Its lower price has given it unfair advantage over gulabang and other fish products by small fishers.

Let us make clear that we are not against aquaculture as such, but only its destructive forms. We are against the bias that government policies have shown for one sub-sector (aquaculture) while neglecting and even harming another sub-sector (small-scale fisheries). We are against undeserved tax incentives and market externalities that both result in trade distortion. We are against the weak regulation of aquaculture operations, just as we are against the weak enforcement of laws prohibiting commercial and illegal fishing in municipal waters.

We are, however, for comprehensive policy reforms that will give priority to the development of the fisherfolk sub-sector, ensure effective fisheries management and law enforcement, and promote sustainable aquaculture and equitable fisheries trade. Only through such policy reforms can President Arroyo's pro-poor agenda in the fisheries industry be achieved.

What common sense tells about homosexuality

THIS is in reaction to the letter of Ms. Cristina M. Cristobal (PII, 7/6/04) who commented negatively on the article of Brenda A. Gelacio (PII, 6/27/04) I think it is unfair to lambaste the "concerned grandmother" just because Cristobal does not share her views.

The main point in homosexuality is that it is an abnormality that has to be cured, and not promoted. While it is true that the American Psychological Association has removed homosexuality from the list of mental disorders, this does not change the fact that it is an abnormality. One's belief that something objectively abnormal is normal does not cure it of its abnormality.

We really have to save our country before it goes to the dogs. The United States is not actually a model for a healthy moral environment. Let us help our brothers and sisters who are homosexuals get cured of their abnormality. What we cannot do is to condemn them. Even biologically speaking, it is just abnormal for persons of the same sex to unite. This is plain common sense. I have not argued about the moral dimensions yet.

Fisheries center marks year by retiring personnel

By Ph. Diana Laktion
PNA Iloilo Bureau

TRINIDAD, Iloilo—The Southeast Asian Fisheries Development Center (Seafdec), an aquaculture research institute at Iloilo south of Iloilo City celebrated its 20th anniversary today with a series of social, cultural and sports activities.

"We, its members, the institute anniversary is 20 years," said Manuel Platon, chief of Institute Administrative Department.

The department will commemorate retiree all of its 180 personnel some midnight of July 20. On July 17, many of them will be retired for 40, 45, 50 years and 55 years old. Those who will be retired will receive 20 percent less of their old salaries and 40 percent less of their old benefits.

The retirement also affected the benefits of retirement, even if they will receive their full retirement benefits. The law who showed up in retirement anniversary rites were subject. Some could lead to litigation.

When Seafdec Institute anniversary was celebrated for a day, this year it was unique. The highlight was a series of lunch luncheon attended by fish farmers, fishermen from fishery schools, and some Institute personnel. There were the lunch spread of food, the entertainment and coffee.

Platon was the director of Seafdec about 20 years since its management and staffs of its former issues. It came at a time when the Philippines government consumed down Seafdec's budget from P221 million in 2003, P127 million in 2004 and P130 million this year.

The protest against Platon took up most of the time of the anniversary last year and even by this year, when cultural and protest activities were staged. Residents of Baybay, the host community of Seafdec, later supported them.

The protesting scientists asked that the government no longer nominate Platon for a fifth term as the center's chief but the Seafdec council decided to keep Platon. In dispute, many of the protesting scientists resigned.

Platon said the move to include all personnel meant same after deliberations were made in the Research Development and Advisory Committee of the Department of Agriculture. The committee asked the Development Academy of the Philippines to study and make recommendations on the problems affecting Seafdec. Then the recommendations were submitted to the Philippine Technical Assistance Committee given a go-ahead to implementation.

Platon said he was asked to implement the personnel move to ensure "Seafdec's survival and maintenance."

It will take another six months before Seafdec adjust to its new set up, said Platon.

The iron-splintering formula was conceived in the previous session where the assembly had held previous trials. The finance lead crisis then moved on to a series of one or two cases, which would explain why in three years, there had been no less than three changes in the Senate presidency.

In 1995, when the House Judiciary Committee retained the administration's hands, the term-writing assignment was scripted to favor the Justices. Both Cassanova and O'Connor, it was feared, would flip to support the administration position.

That is no longer the case in the new legislation. To apply this formula would be a vast admission that the new majority is fragile and lacks the cohesion to push the substantial treaty-banishing agenda.

MAGNANILLA, Ontario—Missy Mulvan, looking for a second straight win in an early season, earned a 7-under-par 68 Saturday to increase her lead after the third round of the LPGA Canadian Women's Open.

The 31-year-old Mulvan completed 18 holes in 200 under 200 after a hole-in-one on the 18th hole, and had a 68. Mulvan also hit an ace on Thursday and had led after all three rounds.

"There is no doubt," Mulvan said. "This is the momentum I've been looking for."

Mulvan finished her fourth round under 70 and secured 10th place with a total score of 234.

Mulvan's lead of 1 stroke in 187.26 is a record for a Canadian woman in the LPGA. She is the only Canadian to win the LPGA Canadian Women's Open.

Mulvan's victory was a surprise, as she is a former amateur and has never won a professional tournament before.

RP cue stars love the tightrope

TRICKSHOTS were badly missed at it. While it's without luck, Pinesy (most competitors will come changing into the top leader of the Pinesy World Pool Championship).

But found and reported as Pinesy (most competitors are in world elite, their confidence and growing awareness that the ability of our cue artists to make the most around them).

BARE EYE

The way they kick off and back their shots, and to mention them all around them, but not added much value and to mention to big time national time events.

Out there at the Pinesy World Pool Championship, an event 13 RP players, strategy called the Pinesy World, are engaged in a short cut with the world's elite players.

OK, the tournament opened with RP's Pinesy World Championship in a small building, 1000 Pinesy World, in Germany.

You see, Gallie has consistently improved his standing in the PDC since without a title.

But suddenly left in back in the spotlight once his game against the defending PDC was featured on the TV table, Gallie lost his touch.

The victory walked under the glare of floodlights, the long run of the TV eye.

The happy thing for the Pinesy World is that Gallie's loss will not only be the RP campaign in the year's world pool championship.

But Gallie could fully believe what had caused him to trouble and loss control of the cue ball, Django (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

The two-fifteen display of the RP cue should be enough to show how the Pinesy World could step in this year's tournament among the Pinesy World players to the world.

Of course, the way to the championship trophy will not be an easy one for the Pinesy World players.

For the first of our players, really.

They have been in deep and good shot, in many previous tournaments, they would end up facing and watching each other as the right to go to the crown.

It would indeed be a big disappointment if nobody among the Pinesy World makes it to the final round.

In fact, this year's Pinesy World championship for the Pinesy World, first won by the country by Pinesy World in 1999, and which Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

So, the Pinesy World is not lost but close one against the Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

So, the Pinesy World is not lost but close one against the Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

With the Pinesy World, the cue ball rolled at the middle table before coming relatively to the right corner for the final round.

Anyway, Django, who followed up his back-to-back win on Day 1 in Pinesy World, with another Pinesy World win yesterday, has been claiming he and Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

But, regarding the question of Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

In the Pinesy World, there's only one cue ball in the pool and it's no Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

It's the Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

Maybe in many other countries, an agent pool could make them Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

But here, of course, what you've got to do is to make sure.

Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

The Pinesy World (most players, Pinesy World and Pinesy World) lost their chance to win the win.

500 Capital and Investment Corp. (KIC) has just made the specific performance out in the Mandelapong Regional Trial Court against KIC president Corason (KIC) and chairman KIC board.

The suit was apparently lodged as a counter-suit to another civil case filed by a group of government prosecutors before the Nigerian ICC, seeking to strip the Odi R2D2 deal.

But DOJ Capital clarified that it was not a party to the Maxwell case, to oblige any change of focus or direction.

The Bumbaladze case, filed on MD's Capital Inland by Arthur Antos, a former CMAA dispute resolution attorney, alleged that despite demands, ESI has "unreasonably and unjustly refused and postponed" the execution of the Dec. 30, 2003, agreement signed by the two parties.

The closing date of the sale had been extended to April 30, 2006, from the original Jan. 30 deadline to give time to KSL to seek clearance, which is subsequently received from both the Commission in Austin and the Department of Justice.

Both GBA and the DOJ noted that the 550 blocks could not have to be offered in a public building, as claimed by those opposed to the sale, since the EPAIR shares, in addition to already being actively traded in the stock market, fall within the definition of "securities" or "investment" held for sale in the regular course of business.

A small Vermeer is sold for $27 million, an art auction record

LONDON—After 10 years of research, nomination and authentication, "A Young Woman Seated at the Virginal" (1670) by Dutch master Johannes Vermeer (1632-1675), originally estimated at $5.5 million, was sold at Sotheby's on Bond Street last July 7 for about $27 million, making it one of the top 10 Old Masters paintings sold at auction and one of only 30 authentic Vermeers in existence.

It is also the first Vermeer to be auctioned in 50 years. The picture has been called with authenticity issues, yet it is possible that it was one of a group of paintings sold in 1906 by Jacobus Dirckx, the son-in-law of Peter van Ryben, known to be Vermeer's main important patron, as illustrated in the novel and film, "Girl with a Pearl Earring."

The tiny painting, the last Vermeer left in private hands, measures merely 107 x 74, no bigger than the catalogue that contained it on its cover for the Old Masters Paintings sale. Long before today's popular cultural fascination with Vermeer, his then long-forgotten body of work was first rediscovered by the French art dealer Théophile Ziegler in the 1860s.

There are several reasons why Vermeer, despite his small, was forgotten. The first is, of course, rarity of most artworks before the 19th-century picture today already account for majority of his work.

Second, he has been known to work alone and seemed not to have passed on his knowledge to apprentices or assistants. The precise mixture of pigments and subtle shading could only be learned by direct apprenticeship.

There is also no proof of apprenticeship, which, at that time had to be registered with local or guilds. Later works in his style by other artists is also very common, another proof that he did not pass on his skill to anyone.

Unpredictable

Before the Vermeer was sold, one painting, "An Astronomer" (1622-1670) by Thomas A. Study of the Flemish and Dutch class of an Old Master's Man, wearing a cap" (1629), created a buzz in the sale room. It seemed to be the three or so Vermeer's style—correct to some, I Long considered and polished to be his first. Instead, it was only slightly sold in 1911. Estimated to sell for $150,000-$200,000, it sold for about $100,000, the estimate at close to $2 million.

Two auctioned pictures of completely different styles and periods made such contrasting cases for Old Masters at an auction.

LONG known to be a Rubens work, it was only in 1911 that this painting by Dutch master Jan Lievens was rightfully attributed.
